With the rapid expansion of traditional large language model inference into areas such as image generation, video generation, intelligent marketing, digital content creation and multimodal agents, customer demand for computing power has continued to grow. In response to these market developments, and to further consolidate the competitive strengths of its AI offerings and improve operational efficiency, the Group plans to procure GPUs and expand strategically into businesses related to upstream computing infrastructure. Through the provision of highly reliable computing power resources and integrated hardware-and-software solutions and services, the Group seeks to foster new growth drivers and capture opportunities in the computing power market.

The GPU procurement will further enhance the Group's computing power resources, with a primary focus on supporting the multimodal reasoning and content generation needs of its AI products. After prioritising the computing power requirements of the Group's core research and development activities and business operations, the Group may, taking into account the availability of its computing resources and prevailing market demand, and subject to compliance with applicable regulatory requirements, leverage "Weimob Intelligent Computing" to gradually expand its provision of computing power leasing, computing hardware resale and other computing power services to third-party customers, aiming to enhance resource utilisation efficiency and explore potential additional revenue streams.

The Directors believe that the GPU procurement is in line with the Group's business development strategy and is expected to contribute to the Group's long-term development.
