3. Major reasons for the estimated increase in profit for the period

At the beginning of 2020, due to the dual impact of the COVID-19 epidemic and the plunge in oil prices, the global consumption of petroleum and petrochemical products shrunk sharply, greatly impacting the Company's production and operation and resulting in loss in operating results in the first quarter of 2020. In the first quarter of 2021, the Company's operating performance improved significantly, and is expected to achieve a turnaround as compared with the corresponding period in 2020 and to achieve an increase as compared with the corresponding period in 2019. The major reasons are as follows: Since the beginning of the current year, the effects of global epidemic prevention and control have gradually emerged. The epidemic has been effectively controlled domestically and economic operations have maintained restorative growth. The Company seized the favourable opportunity of rising international crude oil prices and of significantly improving market demand for petroleum and petrochemical products, and made every effort to optimize production and operation arrangements and vigorously promoted the overall efficiency of the industrial chain and value chain, resulting in a significant increase in the volume of refinery throughput, as well as sales of refined oil products and major chemical products, maintaining the gross profit at high level. Meanwhile, efforts have been continuously strengthened for costs and expenses reduction, effectively reducing the crude oil procurement costs and operating costs, and good performance has been achieved.

4. Risk alert

There are no major uncertainties which will affect the accuracy of this estimated result of the Company.
