FX HEDGING CONTRACTS

THE FX HEDGING CONTRACTS

On 20 April 2023, MECOM New Materials, a non-wholly owned subsidiary of the Company, entered into the FX Hedging Contracts with the Bank, an Independent Third Party, to hedge against RMB/HK$ currency risk, in respect of a total Principal Amount of HK$120 million. The Group, through MECOM New Materials and Ao Gang Construction, is engaged in trading of steel materials in its ordinary and usual course of business. As the Group's purchases of steel materials are denominated in RMB, while its sales of steel materials are denominated in HK$, the Group will from time to time convert HK$ to RMB for settlement of trade payables and payment of operational expenses, resulting in foreign exchange exposure to the Group. In light of this, the Group has entered into the FX Hedging Contracts through MECOM New Materials with the aim of hedging against such currency risk.

The aggregate Principal Amount was determined by the Group primarily with reference to the size of the steel structures business of the Group, while the effective HK$:RMB exchange rates under the FX Hedging Contracts were determined by the Group primarily with reference to the recent developments in the HK$:RMB exchange rate.

REASONS FOR AND BENEFITS OF THE FX HEDGING CONTRACTS

The Group, through MECOM New Materials and Ao Gang Construction, is engaged in trading of steel materials in its ordinary and usual course of business.
